

RISX: ICMR (Re)Insurance Specialty Index

Insurance Capital Markets Research

28 May 2022

What is RISX?

- Thematic equity index focused on growing sector of global specialty (re)insurance, which is at the forefront of managing climate change risk
- Specialty (re)insurance is instrumental in underwriting large and complex risks, including natural and man made catastrophes
- The index is based on specialty (re)insurance premiums, and therefore risk weighted, not market capitalisation weighted

Why now?

- Fundamental shifts in climate, economies and societies towards net-zero, digitalisation and urbanisation require extensive investments and innovation - these carry huge risks which need specialist underwriting and global risk syndication to manage
- The increasing number of natural catastrophes and COVID-19 have demonstrated the protection needed for a resilient society
- While non-life insurance premiums is expected to double to US$4.3Trn a year by 2040 according to Swiss Re (Sigma 4/2021), speciality (re)insurance is likely to outpace this growth rate

Why does it matter?

- This is a thematic index for an often underrepresented sector in investment portfolios, which targets industry innovators through their participation in the Lloyd's of London specialty (re)insurance market
- It reflects a truly global spread of risk through its constituent companies
- Specialty (re)insurance plays an important role within society, making communities more resilient - it has environmental, social and governance (ESG) factors at its core
- Attractive total returns with lower correlation, irrespective of broader economic and financial market conditions as fundamental volatility driver is claims fortuity
